Ludacris is opening a restaurant called Chicken and Beer inside of the Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport. The rapper and actor announced the exciting news in an Instagram video with the caption "emergency special announcement," saying, "It took me three years, but it's finally coming to fruition. Anything that's worth waiting for is worth having, and we are finally here. I've seen it come from my third album all the way to a restaurant. Great food, great drinks, great energy, and my employees are the best employees in the world." The restaurant's name is a tribute to Ludacris's third studio album, Chicken N Beer, released in 2003.

The menu for Chicken and Beer will include classic comfort foods that would make any airport experience more enjoyable, like shrimp and grits, chicken soup, and Luda's chicken and waffles. Get a sneak peek at the restaurant in the video above, and look out for Chicken and Beer at Concourse D at the Atlanta airport starting on Nov. 17. Congratulations to Ludacris!
